This book argues that definite descriptions refer to or range over individuals, as claimed by Frege and Strawson. Working within a situation semantics framework, Elbourne maintains that definite descriptions combine with a situation variable in the syntax; at this semantic level, the whole expression is of type e and contains a locally free situation variable that can be either referential or bound by some higher operator.

Paul Elbourne defends the Fregean view that definite descriptions ('the table', 'the King of France') refer to individuals, and offers a new and radical account of the semantics of pronouns. He draws on a wide range of work, from Frege, Peano, and Russell to the latest findings in linguistics, philosophy of language, and psycholinguistics.
